Millinery and Dressmaking. Cemetery, where the Plumed Knight's remains are interred, "and I point it out and tell visitors about it every day in the year. It is more visited than any other grave in this cemetery."

Over the grave, says a Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, there is neither monument nor inscription save a small footstone with the initials." J. G. a small footstone with the initials. "J. G. a small footstone with the initials "J. G. a small footstone with the dead statesman's wish, his only monument. The tree was a magnificent hickory, one of the many of its kind that divide the nonre of the hiliside with the umbrageous oaks that give the cemetery its name.

The absence of a monument is not a sign of neglect, but it was his own request. Upon the death of his son Walker the ex-Secretary of State selected a lot in Oak Hill Cemetery overlooking the waters of Rock Creek. Here Walker Halne was buried, and when Mr. Blaine's daughter, Mrs. Copplinger, died, he bought the adjoining lot, where she was intered.

On this lot there stood an old hickory tree. Some years before it had been struck by lighning and died at the top, but it was trimmed and revived, and now bids fair to reach as green an old age as any other tree in the cemetery. Mr. Balne requested, when he bought the second lot, that this tree should never be destroyed, and that on his death be should be buried beneath it. When, after weeks of illness, the end came, his wish was carried out, and the tree now stands in lieu of a monument to mark his resting place.

The seriousness with which this man spoke would beave no doubt as to his present intentan, should the occasion demand it. He is a man of intelligence, and is strongly averse to wrong-doing in other channels, but rather than fall back into his former rough and rugged path, and continue there, he will commit sui-cide, as above stated, and hide himself forever.
